DARK REGENERATION

While world seemed condemned to live in an universe made of totalitarian government, economic competition and financial imperialism, new doors open and forgotten stars shine again. The dance of revolt and struggle begins. From Maghreb to Middle-East, the youth rise up, taking the rest of the society in their dance and their need for freedom. In Tunisia as in Egypt, governments were fired and had to get out. New struggles begin then, under the anxious eye of western governments, to know how to reinvent life without dictatorship. Battle has just begun. In Yemen as in Syria, the population slurs violent repression and refuses to be intimidated, in spite of murders and torture. Lost in these Arabian convulsions, NATO decided to go on war in Libya, so that military industry can get some advantages in those revolutionary events... It's not just authority of dictators which knows a deep crisis nowadays, but the whole domination process necessary to economic health. In China, which is respected by the markets for its incredible economic development, riots expand. Thousand of people, manly migrants workers, fight police rejecting their slave conditions and asking for social justice. In Spain, the youth rise up, asking for a real democracy, refusing politics based on economic benefits for rich people only. In Greece, population rejects the projects that the International Monetary Fund tries to dictate : privatizations and economic austerity, in other words, bad living conditions and misery. These revolts are landmarks to make us realize that the power of money is always built against people and human living. Each economic crisis is a domination crisis. What we see then, is that people still didn't release their last scream yet, and that they don't accept the restrictive political spaces to express themselves politically. Refusal of the world-as-it-goes is here and now, in each of our actions. In order to keep these crisis times ours, and that they don't become an occasion of re-composition for conservative, reactionary or fascist ideas, we have to find a way for our refusals to meet and converge. We are Syrians, Tunisians, Egyptians. We are Spanish indignados, and Greeks on strike. We feel oppressed by the borders which repress our desires, but our critics flow together. We don't need no G8 nor IMF, we need borders to collapse so that we can meet at last.

DIPLOMAT'S SPRINGBREAK

The side effect of the Arabian revolution is that French politicians lost luxurious holiday destinations paid by tyrants. This is the sad fate of the former French minister of foreign affairs. While she was suggesting to the Tunisian dictator that France knows how to apply the enforcement in terms of law and order, press revealed her holidays offered by the Tunisian dictatorship. In the face of this situation she had to quit the government but this scandal reveals the links that exist between French government and dictatorships all over the world. Indeed, the prime minister recently traveled at the expense of the Egyptian president who has just been kicked out by the Egyptians. The French diplomacy was well obliged to recognize and congratulate this uprising. Bachar El Assad who kills Syrian rebels was invited to the French national day in 2008. And Kadhafi was given a warm welcome in France when it consisted in selling him warplanes. What a strange democracy, making the best of his friendly connections with dictatorships...

GIVE ME THIS OLD TIME SONG

Because he sang "L'Hécatombe" of Georges Brassens (1921/1981) in front of cops, a man was condemned to a 200 euro fine and 40 hours of forced community service. In this 1952's song, a group of old women attack policemen on a market. To show solidarity, and their love for the libertarian spirit of Brassens songs, a choir sang the same "Hécatombe" in front of a police station few days latter. The 29 singers were arrested and menaced to be judged for offense of contempt against police. Brassens is so respected in France that there's even schools, public-spaces and streets named like him. But offense of contempt is even more fashion then Brassens nowadays to ban resistance acts.

ANONYMOUS ANTI-POWER

« We are Anonymous. We are Legion. We do not forgive. We do not forget. Expect us. » This self-description stays the unknown catch phrase of the group Anonymous that continues its operations of destabilization of the power on the Internet. After the success of the Pay-Back operation, which

Operation Sony also had a certain impact. As Sony declared war on computer hacker on their products, Anonymous attacked and blocked the Playstation network, announcing to gamers: "We have launched this attack against Sony to send a message to gamers all over the world who have rights and who are aimed the opponents of downloading, they launched a lot of other actions. Operation Leapskin-
